WILLINS (D Thomas

Encyclopaedia Britannica (1771)

Historical source

Entry ID: `entry-willins-d-thomas-258`
Volume ID: 191679021
Character Count: 2106

Extracted Text

WILLINS (D Thomas), a celebrated English Myckling, was born at Great Bodwin, in WildHere, in 1611, and fludied at Chrift-church college, Oxford. When that city was parturient for the king, the among other scholars, bore must be his Majidity, and devoted his three hours to the flyt of phyfeic. The garrior of Oxford at Leughr furnerdening to the patmanie, he applied himself to the practice of his pacification and foam rendered himself famous by his care and full. He appropriated a room as an contrary for driven revoc according to the church of England, whether end of the loyalists in Oxford only without. In 1604, he became Seeldian profiler of natural philosophy, and the fame year took the degree of dochor of phyfe. In 1604, he discovered the famonic medicinal prins at Allftrop, our Brackley. He was one of the first members of the Royal Society, and from made his name illustrious by his excellent writings. In 1605 after the first of London, he traveled to Wilminker; and his practice became greater than that of any of the physicians his contemporaries. Soon after he farfetment in London, his only for Thomas falling into a companion, the feet him to Monopolier in France for the recovery of his health; and it proved fucetful. His wife allo boating under the frame different the areas of providing for his family, died in 1670. He died at his house in So Bharti's in Oregon, and was buried near her in fifathmande abby. Dr Willis was extremely mournish and mannikians, and refrufed the honour of knightthood. He was remarkably proust. As he role early in the morning, that the maybe he pointed across foreign forces, which conclually frequested before he vifited his patients, he procured prayers to be read beyond the secundance times while he lives and at his death settled a ifgood of such pernum to continue them. He was a liberal benefactor to the poor wherever he came, having from his only practice adopted yet of his profits to charitable use. He was exact and re-gular is all his hours; a and through his table was the refert of molt of the great men of London, yet he was remarkable

Source record

- Dataset: `NationalLibraryOfScotland/encyclopaedia_britannica_illustrated`
- Dataset Revision: `309f765b1ecc83e0a7f7762e44b4a927a7555443`
- Page ID: `britannica:309f765b1ecc83e0a7f7762e44b4a927a7555443:train:258`
  Filename: `page-0258-631a7ae7df34.jpg`
  Row Index: 258
  SHA256: `631a7ae7df340a64...`

William lordſhip, and ſome time after the great ſeal. Edward being returned to England, after having carried on a very ſucceſsful war in France, found his exchequer in great diſorder. The duke of Lancaſter, one of his ſons, at the head of ſeveral lords, having brought complaints againſt the clergy, who then enjoyed moſt poſts in the kingdom, the king removed them from their employments. But the laymen, who were raiſed to them, behaved ſo ill, that the king was forced to reſtore the eccleſiaſtics. The duke of Lancaſter ſhowed ſtrong animoſity to the clergy, and ſet every engine at work to ruin Wykeham. He impeached him of extortion, and of diſguiſing things, and obliged him to appear at the King's-bench. He got ſuch judges appointed as condemned him; and not ſatisfied with depriving him of all the temporalities of his biſhopric, he adviſed Edward to baniſh him: but this prince rejected the propoſal, and afterward reſtored to Wykeham all that he had been diveſted of. Richard II. was but eleven years old when Edward died: whereby the duke of Lancaſter had an eaſy opportunity of reviving the accuſations againſt the biſhop of Wincheſter: nevertheleſs Wykeham cleared himſelf. Then he founded two noble colleges, the one in Oxford, the other in Wincheſter. Whilſt he was exerting his utmoſt endeavours to improve theſe two fine foundations, he was recalled to court, and in a manner forced to accept of the office of lord high-chancellor in 1389.—Having excellently diſcharged the duties of that employment for three years, he obtained leave to reſign it, foreſeeing the diſturbances that were going to break out. Being returned to his church, he finiſhed his college, and built there ſo magnificent a cathedral, that it almoſt equals that of St Paul's in London. He laid out ſeveral ſums in things advantageous to the public and to the poor; notwithſtanding which, in 1397 he was in great danger; for he and ſome others were impeached of high-treaſon in open parliament: however, he was again fully cleared. From that time till his death he kept quiet in his dioceſe, and there employed himſelf in all the duties of a good prelate. He died in 1404, in the 81ſt year of his age.

William, the name of ſeveral kings of England. See England, n° 87—92, and Britain, n° 302.

Fort-William, a fortreſs in the Highlands of Scotland, erected in king William's reign, as was alſo a ſmall town adjoining, called Maryburgh, in honour of his queen. It is ſituated in Inverneſsſhire, on a narrow arm of the ſea called Loch Eil, which might eaſily, by a very ſhort canal, be united to the Weſtern ſea. Fort-William is of a triangular form, having two baſtions, and is capable of admitting a garriſon of 800 men; but could not be defended againſt an attack, as it is commanded by ſeveral hills in the neighbourhood.

William's Fort, is a factory of Aſia belonging to the Eaſt-India company, ſeated on one of the branches of the river Ganges, in the kingdom of Bengal. The fort was firſt built in the ſhape of an irregular tetragon of brick and mortar; and the town has nothing regular in it, becauſe every one built a houſe as he liked beſt, and for his own conveniency. The governor's houſe is within the fort, and is the beſt piece of architecture in theſe parts. Here there are alſo convenient lodgings for the factors and writers, with ſtore-houſes for the company's goods, and magazines for ammunition. About 50 yards from the fort is the church, built by the charity of merchants reſiding here. The town is called Calcutta, and has a pretty good hoſpital for the ſick, though few come out of it alive. It is governed by a mayor and aldermen, as moſt of the company's factories in the Eaſt Indies now are. In 1757 it was ſurpriſed by the nabob of Bengal, who took it, and put moſt of thoſe that had made reſiſtance into a place called the Black Hole, where moſt of them were ſmothered. This nabob was afterwards killed, and another ſet up in his room, more friendly to the Engliſh; and the factory was re-eſtabliſhed. E. Long. 86. 0. N. Lat. 22. 27.

Sweet-William. See Dianthus.

WILLIAMSBURG, a town of North America, in Virginia, and formerly capital of that ſtate. It is ſituated between two creeks; one falling into James, and the other into York River. The diſtance of each landing place is about a mile from the town, which, with the diſadvantage of not being able to bring up large veſſels, and the want of enterpriſe in the inhabitants, has occaſioned its decay. Here is a college, deſigned for the education of the Indians, but which, on account of their averſion to learning, never anſwered the purpoſe. It is 60 miles eaſt of Richmond. W. Long. 76. 30. N. Lat. 37. 10.

WILLIAMSTADT, a ſea-port town of Holland. It is a handſome ſtrong place, and the harbour is well frequented. It was built by William prince of Orange in 1585; and in 1732 belonged to the ſtadtholder of Frieſland. The river near which it is built is called Butterſlist or Holland Diep; and is one of the bulwarks of the Dutch on the ſide of Brabant, where they always keep a garriſon. This place made a gallant defence in 1793 againſt the French, who were obliged to raiſe the ſiege. It is 15 miles north-eaſt of Bergen-op-Zoom, and 12 ſouth-weſt of Dort. E. Long. 4. 30. N. Lat. 51. 39.

WILLIS (Dr Thomas), a celebrated Engliſh phyſician, was born at Great Bodwin, in Wiltſhire, in 1621, and ſtudied at Chriſt-church college, Oxford. When that city was garriſoned for the king, he, among other ſcholars, bore arms for his Majeſty, and devoted his leiſure hours to the ſtudy of phyſic. The garriſon of Oxford at length ſurrendering to the parliament, he applied himſelf to the practice of his profeſſion; and ſoon rendered himſelf famous by his care and ſkill. He appropriated a room as an oratory for divine ſervice according to the church of England, whither moſt of the loyaliſts in Oxford daily reſorted. In 1660, he became Sedleian profeſſor of natural philoſophy, and the ſame year took the degree of doctor of phyſic. In 1664, he diſcovered the famous medicinal ſpring at Alſtropp, near Brackley. He was one of the firſt members of the Royal Society, and ſoon made his name illuſtrious by his excellent writings. In 1666, after the fire of London, he removed to Weſtminſter; and his practice became greater than that of any of the phyſicians his contemporaries. Soon after his ſettlement in London, his only ſon Thomas falling into a conſumption, he ſent him to Montpelier in France for the recovery of his health; and it proved ſucceſsful. His wife alſo labouring under the ſame diſorder, he offered to leave the town; but ſhe, not ſuffering him to neglect the means of providing for his family, died in 1670. He died at his houſe in St Martin's in 1675, and was buried near her in Weſtminſter-abbey. Dr Willis was extremely modeſt and unambitious, and refuſed the honour of knighthood. He was remarkably pious: As he roſe early in the morning, that he might be preſent at divine ſervice, which he conſtantly frequented before he viſited his patients, he procured prayers to be read beyond the accuſtomed times while he lived; and at his death ſettled a ſtipend of 20l. per annum to continue them. He was a liberal benefactor to the poor wherever he came, having from his early practice allotted part of his profits to charitable uſes. He was exact and regular in all his hours: and though his table was the reſort of moſt of the great men of London, yet he was remarkable

Figure 1: *
Source scan: page-0258-631a7ae7df34.jpg