AL G 241 A L G

Encyclopaedia Britannica (1771)

Historical source

Entry ID: `entry-al-g-241-a-l-g-2307`
Volume ID: 144850370
Character Count: 5839

Extracted Text

for their valoragainl the enemies of Christianity. Even ladies of birth and character attended Charles in his expedition, and the views and daughters of the officers and folders followed them with a delger to fertile in Barbary after the conquit was finished. All trade meeting with a favorable wind, footop appeared before Algeria; every flip displaying the Spanish colours on the stern, and another at the head, with a cruiser to fierce from a plot.

_Algiers._

By this proudgism armament, the Algerines were thrown into the utmost confianeration. The city was fur- rounded only by a wall with force any outwalks. The whole grandma could if 80o Tinka and Ooco Moors, without fire-arms, and poorly displined and acoustic tret; the reflet of their forces being dipedled in the oro they provoted of the kingdom, to key the final chance on the Arabs and Moore. The Spaniards landed with out oppositions and immediately built a fort, under the unions of which they exempted, and directed the courte of a spring which fupplied the city with water. Being now reduced to the utmost difrets, Haffan received a immune to formative art direction, on pain of being put to the fword with all the garrition. The kanal was ordered to send the full power of the empre! body for and land, and to cahar him to return to the Christian religion. But to this Haffan only rreified, that he must be animals who would pee tand to advise an enemy, and that the dividend mill fill act more madly who would take counsel of such an adviter. He was, however, on the point of farredering the city, upon an witness towards him that the forces belonging to the wellern government were in full marach towards the places, upon which it was referred to de fent to the utmost. Charles, in the meantime, reloing upon a general affault, kept a constant firing upon the towns; which, from the weak defense made by the garrition, he looked soon as already in his hands. But while the obvious, or Algerine female, were deli- bordering on the mollit proper means of obtaining an bouncable captivities, and probably afforded by a multitude of people, entered the affembly, and fore told the flying distribution of the Spaniards before the end of the moon, extending the inhabitants to hold our till that time. This prediction was foon accomplished in a very fulfilling and unexpected manner: for, on the 39% of October 1541s a deadful from of wind, rain, and hail, arole from the north, accompanied with white flocks of earthquakes, and a dindi and univerful darkade both by the sand had; so that the fun, moon, and elements, forced to combine together for the dethration of the Spaniards. In fact one night, force in first than half an hour, 86 things and is greatly were defrtedy, with all their crews and military flores; by which the army on there was deprived of all means of diluting in their people. Their campsite as which spread lifel along the plain under the fort, was laid quite under water, the overre which defend from the neighboring hills. Many of the troops, by trying to remove into force better situation, were cut in pieces by the Moors and Arabes, while fever, pylley, and other reptiles, endeavouring to gentlem go under the canals, were immediately plunder- ed, and their crew ensulfants by the inhabitants.

15 Prevented by and prophet from fore- rendering.

27 Spaniils feet of delayed by a floor.

Spaniils feet of delayed by a floor.

The next morning, Charles ledell the far covered with the fragments of fo many things, and the bodies of men, horses, and other creatures, fevimming on the waves; at which he was fo dihertered, that abandoning his tests, artillery, and all his heavy bagages, to see enemy, he marched at the head of his Army, though in no fault diforer, towards Cape _Middos_, in order to embark in those few vehicles which had outweathered the forms. But Haffan, who had used his motions to be watched, allowed him just time to get to the floors, when the failed out and attacked the Spaniards in the multit of their hurry and condition to get into their flaps, killing great numbers, and bringing away a full greater number of capitars; after which he recened in stumpt to Algiers, where he celebrated with great rejoicing his injury deliverance from both difi- trots and danger.

Algiers.

a a signed Al-ders railed.

Ages of Al-ders railed.

Soon after this, the prophet _Tuf/f/j_ who had fortotold the deflection of the Spaniards, was not only declared the delivery of his country, but had a considerable activity decreed him, with the liberty of exercising a projectile motion unmelded. It was not long, how ever, before the manabouts, and some interpreters of the law, makes a strong opposition against him; remost- fritating to the bashy, how ridiculous and Canadian it was to their nation, to defend the defence of it to a poor former-celler, which had been obtained by the current players of an comment faint of their own profefi- tion. But that the bashwa and his downward femen, and of policy, to give into this limitation, yet the im- preflion which Yufes predlifessons and their late accomplillment had made upon the mind of the common people, proved too fringe to her melanzie, and the fifi- of duration and comparing has face got into facts credit among them, that not only their great liathens, but their profits, manabouts, and tuntions, have applied friendées to that study, and digidist it with the name of _Allement Residence._

The anthampy Spaniards had force reached their frh cal- mits of the Spaniards.

Haffan stated with this victory, in which he had Haffan re vary little fhares, undertook an expedition againl the doces Trekking of Temsman, who, being now deprived of the dirt recent.

financed of the Spaniards, was forced to procure space by paying a vail fum of money, and becoming tributary

Source record

- Dataset: `NationalLibraryOfScotland/encyclopaedia_britannica_illustrated`
- Dataset Revision: `309f765b1ecc83e0a7f7762e44b4a927a7555443`
- Page ID: `britannica:309f765b1ecc83e0a7f7762e44b4a927a7555443:train:2307`
  Filename: `page-2307-4ce2ea50e9d2.jpg`
  Row Index: 2307
  SHA256: `4ce2ea50e9d2f403...`

Algiers. for their valour againſt the enemies of Chriſtianity. Even ladies of birth and character attended Charles in his expedition, and the wives and daughters of the officers and ſoldiers followed them with a deſign to ſettle in Barbary after the conqueſt was finiſhed. All theſe meeting with a favourable wind, ſoon appeared before Algiers; every ſhip diſplaying the Spaniſh colours on the ſtern, and another at the head, with a crucifix to ſerve them for a pilot.

15 Algiers in great conſternation. By this prodigious armament, the Algerines were thrown into the utmoſt conſternation. The city was ſurrounded only by a wall with ſcarce any outworks. The whole garriſon conſiſted of 800 Turks and 6000 Moors, without fire-arms, and poorly diſciplined and accoutred; the reſt of their forces being diſperſed in the other provinces of the kingdom, to levy the uſual tribute on the Arabs and Moors. The Spaniards landed without oppoſition, and immediately built a fort, under the cannon of which they encamped, and diverted the courſe of a ſpring which ſupplied the city with water. Being now reduced to the utmoſt diſtreſs, Haſſan received a ſummons to ſurrender at diſcretion, on pain of being put to the ſword with all the garriſon. The herald was ordered to extol the vaſt power of the emperor both by ſea and land, and to exhort him to return to the Chriſtian religion. But to this Haſſan only replied, that he muſt be a madman who would pretend to adviſe an enemy, and that the adviſed muſt ſtill act more madly who would take counſel of ſuch an adviſer. He was, however, on the point of ſurrendering the city, when advice was brought him that the forces belonging to the weſtern government were in full march towards the place; upon which it was reſolved to defend it to the utmoſt. Charles, in the mean time, reſolving upon a general aſſault, kept a conſtant firing upon the town; which, from the weak defence made

16 Prevented by a mad prophet from ſurrendering. by the garriſon, he looked upon as already in his hands. But while the douwan, or Algerine ſenate, were deliberating on the moſt proper means of obtaining an honourable capitulation, a mad prophet, attended by a multitude of people, entered the aſſembly, and foretold the ſpeedy deſtruction of the Spaniards before the end of the moon, exhorting the inhabitants to hold out till that time. This prediction was ſoon accompliſhed in a very ſurpriſing and unexpected manner: for, on the 28th of October 1541, a dreadful ſtorm of wind, rain, and hail, aroſe from the north, accompanied with violent ſhocks of earthquakes, and a diſmal and univerſal darkneſs both by ſea and land; ſo that the ſun, moon, and elements, ſeemed to combine together for the 17 Spaniſh fleet deſtroyed by a ſtorm. deſtruction of the Spaniards. In that one night, ſome ſay in leſs than half an hour, 86 ſhips and 15 galleys were deſtroyed, with all their crews and military ſtores; by which the army on ſhore was deprived of all means of ſubſiſting in theſe parts. Their camp alſo, which ſpread itſelf along the plain under the fort, was laid quite under water by the torrents which deſcended from the neighbouring hills. Many of the troops, by trying to remove into ſome better ſituation, were cut in pieces by the Moors and Arabs; while ſeveral galleys, and other veſſels, endeavouring to gain ſome neighbouring creeks along the coaſts, were immediately plundered, and their crews maſſacred by the inhabitants.

The next morning, Charles beheld the ſea covered with the fragments of ſo many ſhips, and the bodies of men, horſes, and other creatures, ſwimming on the waves; at which he was ſo diſheartened, that abandoning his tents, artillery, and all his heavy baggage, to the enemy, he marched at the head of his army, though in no ſmall diſorder, towards cape Malabux, in order to re-imbark in thoſe few veſſels which had outweathered the ſtorm. But Haſſan, who had cauſed his motions to be watched, allowed him juſt time to get to the ſhore, when he ſallied out and attacked the Spaniards in the midſt of their hurry and confuſion to get into their ſhips, killing great numbers, and bringing away a ſtill greater number of captives; after which he returned in triumph to Algiers, where he celebrated with great rejoicings his happy deliverance from ſuch diſtreſs and danger. Algiers.

18 Siege of Algiers raiſed.

19 The mad prophet rewarded. Soon after this, the prophet Yuſef, who had foretold the deſtruction of the Spaniards, was not only declared the deliverer of his country, but had a conſiderable gratuity decreed him, with the liberty of exerciſing his prophetic function unmoleſted. It was not long, however, before the marabouts, and ſome interpreters of the law, made a ſtrong oppoſition againſt him; remonſtrating to the baſhaw, how ridiculous and ſcandalous it was to their nation, to aſcribe the deliverance of it to a poor fortune-teller, which had been obtained by the fervent prayers of an eminent ſaint of their own profeſſion. But tho' the baſhaw and his douwan ſeemed, out of policy, to give into this laſt notion, yet the impreſſion which Yuſef's predictions and their late accompliſhment had made upon the minds of the common people, proved too ſtrong to be eradicated; and the ſpirit of divination and conjuring has ſince got into ſuch credit among them, that not only their great ſtateſmen, but their prieſts, marabouts, and ſantoons, have applied themſelves to that ſtudy, and dignified it with the name of Mahomet's Revelations.

20 Freſh calamities of the Spaniards. The unhappy Spaniards had ſcarce reached their ſhips, when they were attacked by a freſh ſtorm, in which ſeveral more of them periſhed; one ſhip in particular, containing 700 ſoldiers, beſides ſailors, ſunk in the emperor's ſight, without a poſſibility of ſaving a ſingle man. At length, with much labour, they reached the port of Bujeyah, at that time poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, whither Haſſan king of Tunis ſoon after repaired, with a ſupply of proviſions for the emperor, who received him graciouſly, with freſh aſſurances of his favour and protection. Here he diſmiſſed the few remains of the Malteſe knights and their forces, who embarked in three ſhattered gallies, and with much difficulty and danger reached their own country. Charles himſelf ſtaid no longer than till the 16th of November, when he ſet ſail for Carthagena, and reached it on the 25th of the ſame month. In this unfortunate expedition upwards of 120 ſhips and galleys were loſt, above 300 colonels and other land and ſea officers, 8000 ſoldiers and marines, beſides thoſe deſtroyed by the enemy on their reimbarkation, or drowned in the laſt ſtorm. The number of priſoners was ſo great, that the Algerines ſold ſome of them, by way of contempt, for an onion per head.

21 Haſſan reduces Tremecen. Haſſan, elated with this victory, in which he had very little ſhare, undertook an expedition againſt the king of Tremecen, who, being now deprived of the aſſiſtance of the Spaniards, was forced to procure a peace by paying a vaſt ſum of money, and becoming tributary

Figure 1: *
Source scan: page-2307-4ce2ea50e9d2.jpg