Lembards, judging that a favorable opportunity now offered of making himself king of Italy by her means, important his design to her, and declared his intention to marry her, provided by form means or other, as defated Heimchild-A. Edmund, highly graded with the pro- postal, refored to satisfy her ambition by getting rid of the perfer whom he had married in order to gra-tify her average. Accordingly, having prepared a strong point, the next it will wins, and gave its her husband at be came out of the bath, and did for drink, according to his culm.. Helmchild had not half capital the city, when, by his fashion and strange operation which he felt in his bowls, the controlled what it was , and with his friend pointed at the queens board, compiled her to drink the exit. The goofin had the time effect on both; for they died in a few hours. Longues, on to death of all the pupils, laid aside, all thoughts of making himself King of holy, and fent, the kings texture to Constantinople, together with Alibullahis, the daughter of Albioner by Kod-mund, whom he had brought alone with her.

After the death of Albioners, the Lombarda choic Clephie, one of the holiday for theology. He was murdered after a flort reign of 18 months 3 upon which ended an interception to 10 years, is related to this article. Lucan N? 21. During this time, they extended their compelled in the country, but at all the Romans, johous of their projects, refused to pay a flop to their viflories, and, if podhile, to drive them quite out. For the purpose, they designed and only to employ their own force, the entered into alliance with the Frankri, which to shared the Lombarda that they re-established the amornalised form of government among themselves, and chole Authars the four in Clephie for their king. This moment confirms dering that the peace of the duties, who had governem Lombardy for the figure of 15 years, was during that length of time you may each inhabited, and that they would not probably be willing to part with the arn-theory which they had to long enjoyed, allowed them to continue in their governments / not obliged them to contribute on money of their revenue towards the maintenance and support of his royal digitality, reflecting than to diripted of the other, as they thought pro- pre. He referred to himself in full fire appears emotions and autonomy, and took an oath of the duties, that in time of war, they would readily affid him to the utmost of their power. Though he could remove the duks at pleasure yet to deprives none of them of their decisions, except in codes of reasons, nor gave them to others, except when their task fine failed. Having fettle matters in this manner with the duks, he enabled several wholesome laws against the art, pine, wander, shallary, and other vice which prevailed among the folgifts, and was the furli of the Lombard kings who embraced Chilliance. laws among theft people. Before his time they had Lombarda been governed only by problems but Richard, in imi-tation of the Romans and Gohay undertook the pub- filing of writers have s and to thold which he needed, many were added by the leading providers. Greatina prefiers the method which the Lombards followed in making laws, so that which are prohibited by the Ro- there themselves. Among the latter the emperor was the role langversj is that whatever plodef him land the forces of a law. But the Lombard kings did not allow that you to themelfes, fines their laws were created in public charities, covered for the purpos, here they be been extremely examined and approved of by all the local of the kingdom. From their alien- bible were excluded the scientific order, and the pro- ple is that the legitimate power was ladged in the king and nobo alone.

The region of Barbara is remarkable, not only for his introducing writers laws among his folgists, but for the computer he made, and the beneficial wars carried on with the search of Ravenna, whom he totally defeated in recent engagements, and made himself matter of forms part of his territories. That monarch died in 65:1 and the affairs of the Lombarda were in protagonly, till the ambitions of Lelandpand laid the foundation of the total man of his kingdom. He attended the throw of Escherabus in 711, and Lombards watched all opportunities of entangled his daughter. Embanktion, the expense of the emperors. Of this, a fair oppor- family offered in 916. For the emperor Lea flavours was at this time regard in the earth, having in his famous oddly forbidden the worship of images and ordered them due to everywhere, pulled down, the people were fo provoked at that innovation, that, in fewer places, they openly revoked, and falling up- on the emperors officers, drove them out of the cities. In the old, German, partisanal of Confumantiap, opposed the emperor ddig with green warmth, but Leo could him to be depolied, and Analatha to be failed to that fate in his room, ordering in the time frame all the images in the imperial city to be pulled down and publicly humr. He firstly retained his officer in the early, especially the exact of Roman, to fee his edit punctually obeyed in their respective movements. It completed with their orders, Schlo- falters, then even began to roll down the images in all the church and public places in Ravenna, which inserted the fingertibial multitude to flash degrees, that taking arms, they openly declared they would rather remorse their allegiance to the emperor than the worthy of images.

"That a kind of civil we being kinded in the city, Lampard thought he had now a lived in commonable opport niy of making himself matter of the fast of the search, and doubting but the concept of such an important place would be allowed by that of the whole se- archate. Having therefore drawn together all his budget men, he apparently apparent before Ravenna, and and also chiefly believed in. The search itself expedited does take Ka- furpife, as it finally cortopedizedness had been min- named for many years between the scenes and the Lombard kings. However, he defended the place that fish coming and revolution, thus Lampard's defaling of friends, broke up the finger and led his army against Claffis, at a final diference from Ravenna, which

Lombards. judging that a favourable opportunity now offered of making himſelf king of Italy by her means, imparted his deſign to her, and declared his intention to marry her, provided, by ſome means or other, ſhe deſpatched Helmichild.—Roſamund, highly pleaſed with the propoſal, reſolved to ſatisfy her ambition by getting rid of the perſon whom ſhe had married in order to gratify her revenge. Accordingly, having prepared a ſtrong poiſon, ſhe mixed it with wine, and gave it to her huſband as he came out of the bath, and called for drink, according to his cuſtom. Helmichild had not half emptied the cup, when, by the ſudden and ſtrange

Longinus, on the death of the queen, laid aſide all thoughts of making himſelf king of Italy, and ſent the king's treaſure to Conſtantinople, together with Albiſoinda, the daughter of Alboinus by Roſamund, whom ſhe had brought alone with her.

After the death of Alboinus, the Lombards choſe Clephis, one of the nobility, for their king. He was murdered after a ſhort reign of 18 months; upon which enſued an interregnum of 10 years, as related under 7 the article ITALY, N° 32. During this time, they
Monarchy aboliſhed. extended their conqueſts in that country; but at laſt the Romans, jealous of their progreſs, reſolved to put a ſtop to their victories, and, if poſſible, to drive them quite out. For this purpoſe, they deſigned not only to employ their own force, but entered into alliance with the Franks; which ſo alarmed the Lombards that they re-eſtabliſhed the monarchical form of go-
8 vernment among themſelves, and choſe Autharis the Reſtored. ſon of Clephis for their king. This monarch, conſidering that the power of the dukes, who had governed Lombardy for the ſpace of 10 years, was during that length of time very much eſtabliſhed, and that they would not probably be willing to part with the authority which they had ſo long enjoyed, allowed them to continue in their government; but obliged them to contribute one moiety of their revenues towards the maintenance and ſupport of his royal dignity, ſuffering them to diſpoſe of the other as they thought proper. He reſerved to himſelf the ſupreme dominion and authority; and took an oath of the dukes, that in time of war, they would readily aſſiſt him to the utmoſt of their power. Though he could remove the dukes at pleaſure, yet he deprived none of them of their dukedoms, except in caſes of treaſon; nor gave them to others, except when their male iſſue failed. Having ſettled matters in this manner with the dukes, he enacted ſeveral wholeſome laws againſt theft, rapine, murder, adultery, and other vices which prevailed among his ſubjects, and was the firſt of the Lombard kings who embraced Chriſtianity. Moſt of his ſubjects followed the example of their monarch; but as they were all inſtructed by Arian biſhops, they continued long infected with that hereſy; which occaſioned great diſputes between them and the orthodox biſhops of the cities ſubject to them.

9 From the re-eſtabliſhment of the monarchy under Written laws when firſt introduced. Autharis, to the reign of Rotharis in 636, the hiſtory of the Lombards affords nothing memorable. This period is remarkable for the introduction of written laws among theſe people. Before his time they had Lombards.
been governed only by tradition: but Rotharis, in imitation of the Romans and Goths, undertook the publiſhing of written laws; and to thoſe which he enacted, many were added by the ſucceeding princes. Grotius prefers the method which the Lombards followed in making laws, to that which was practiſed by the Romans themſelves. Among the latter the emperor was the ſole lawgiver; ſo that whatever pleaſed him had the force of a law. But the Lombard kings did not aſſume that power to themſelves, ſince their laws were enacted in public aſſemblies, convened for that purpoſe, after they had been maturely examined and approved of by all the lords of the kingdom. From theſe aſſemblies were excluded the eccleſiaſtic order, and the people: ſo that the legiſlative power was lodged in the king and nobles alone.

The reign of Rotharis is remarkable, not only for his introducing written laws among his ſubjects, but for the conqueſts he made, and the ſucceſsful wars carried on with the exarch of Ravenna, whom he totally defeated in ſeveral engagements, and made himſelf maſter of ſome part of his territories. This monarch died in 652; and the affairs of the Lombards went on proſperouſly, till the ambition of Luitprand laid the foundation of the total ruin of his kingdom.
10 He aſcended the throne of Lombardy in 711, and Luitprand's ambition.
watched all opportunities of enlarging his dominions at the expence of the emperor's. Of this, a fair opportunity offered in 716: for the emperor Leo Iſauricus, who at that time reigned in the eaſt, having, by his famous edict, forbidden the worſhip of images, and ordered them to be everywhere pulled down, the people were ſo provoked at that innovation, that, in ſeveral places, they openly revolted, and, falling upon the emperor's officers, drove them out of the cities. In the eaſt, Germanus, patriarch of Conſtantinople, oppoſed the emperor's deſign with great warmth; but Leo cauſed him to be depoſed, and Anaſtaſius to be raiſed to that ſee in his room, ordering at the ſame time all the images in the imperial city to be pulled down and publicly burnt. He ſtrictly enjoined his officers in the weſt, eſpecially the exarch of Ravenna, to ſee his edict punctually obeyed in their reſpective governments. In compliance with theſe orders, Scholaſticus, then exarch, began to pull down the images in all the churches and public places in Ravenna; which incenſed the ſuperſtitious multitude to ſuch a degree, that taking arms, they openly declared they would rather renounce their allegiance to the emperor than the worſhip of images.

Thus a kind of civil war being kindled in the city, Luitprand thought he had now a favourable opportunity of making himſelf maſter of the ſeat of the exarch, not doubting but the conqueſt of ſuch an important place would be followed by that of the whole ex-11 archate. Having therefore drawn together all his He beſieges and at laſt takes Ravenna.
forces, he unexpectedly appeared before Ravenna, and cloſely beſieged it. The exarch little expected ſuch a ſurpriſe, as a friendly correſpondence had been maintained for many years between the exarchs and the Lombard kings. However, he defended the place with ſuch courage and reſolution, that Luitprand, deſpairing of ſucceſs, broke up the ſiege and led his army againſt Claſſis, at a ſmall diſtance from Ravenna, which
